For my mama,
who told me this story when I was seven—
and for every little gorilla learning life's lessons.

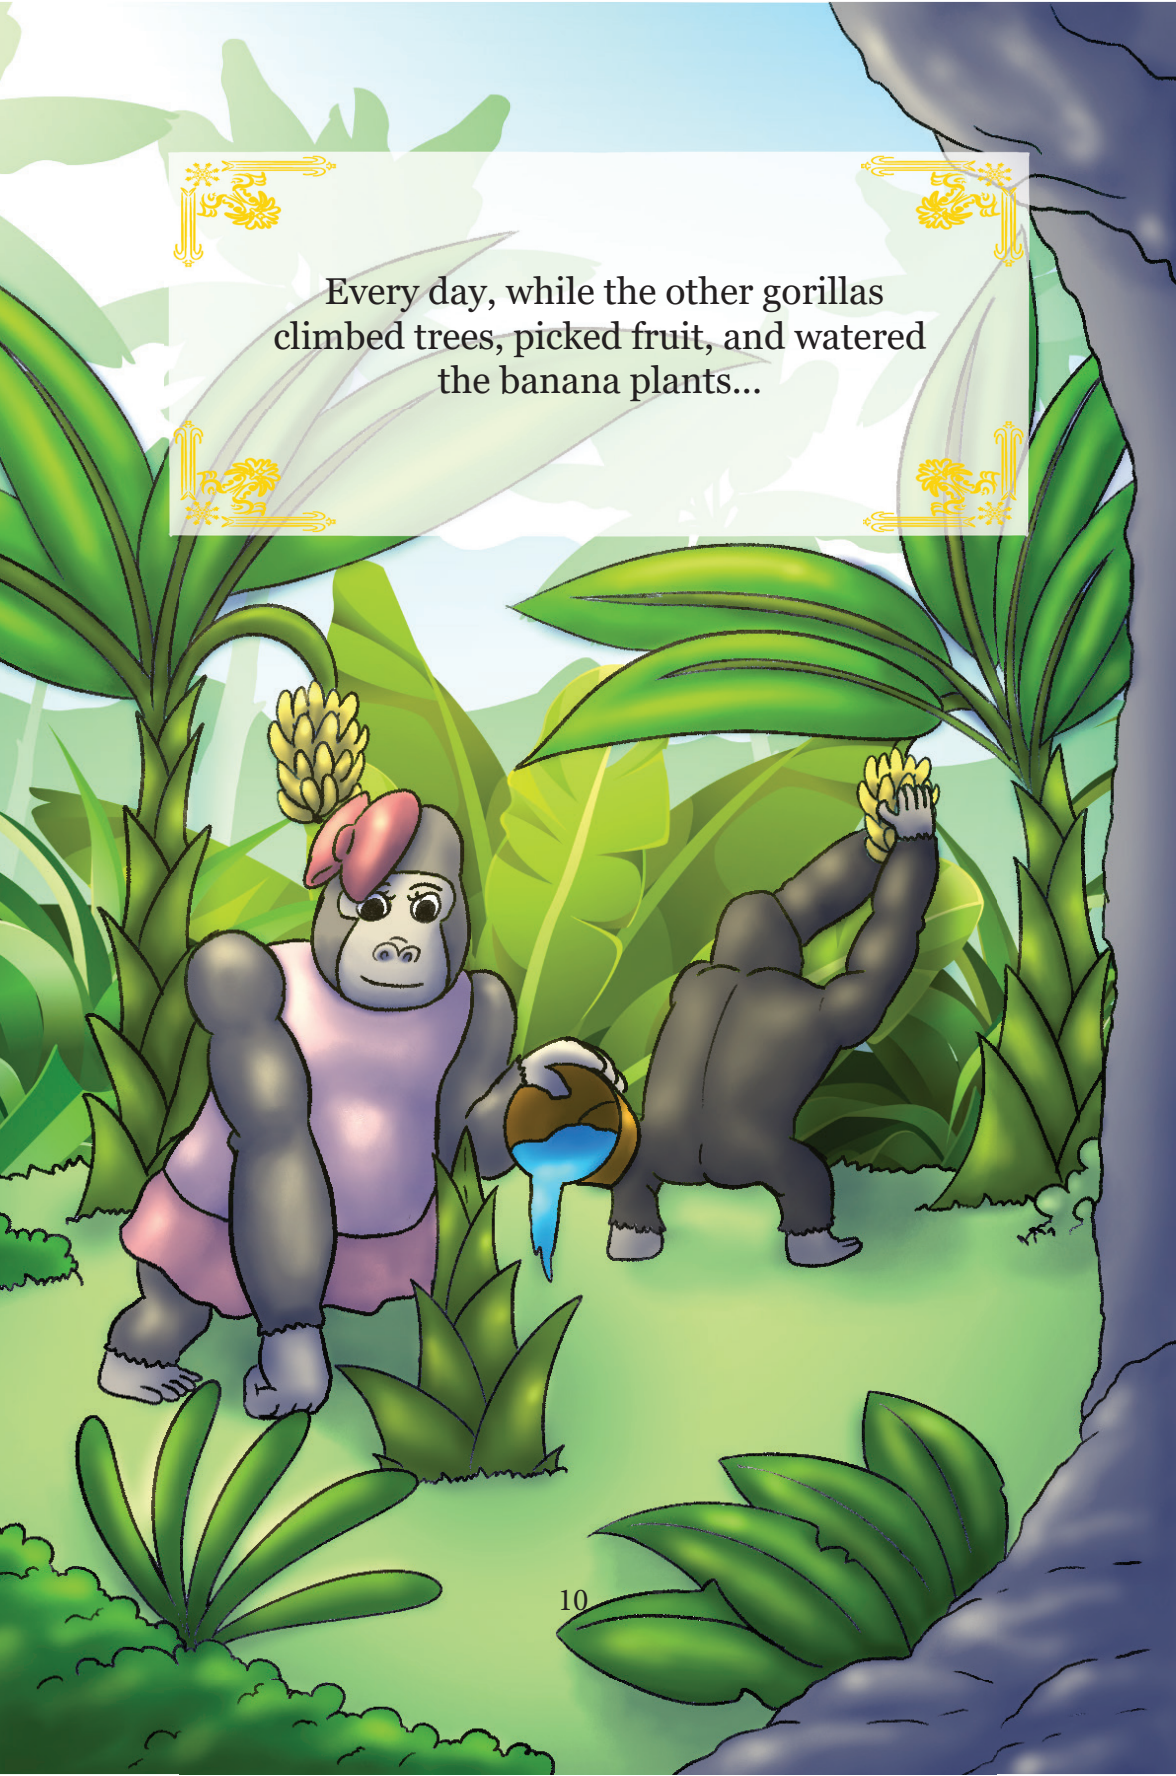

In the middle of the jungle, deep in a leafy green cave, lived a gorilla family of five.

There was Papa Gorilla, Mama Gorilla, Big Brother Bongo, Sister Biba, and Baby Gugu.

Gugu was the youngest.
He was small, fluffy, and round.
And very, very stubborn.
Gugu loved only three things:

Bananas
Lying down
Ignoring everyone

Every day, while the other gorillas climbed trees, picked fruit, and watered the banana plants...

...Gugu stayed in his room, lying on a pile of banana peels.

"I'm too tired."
"I'm busy resting."
"Can't the bananas just come to me?"

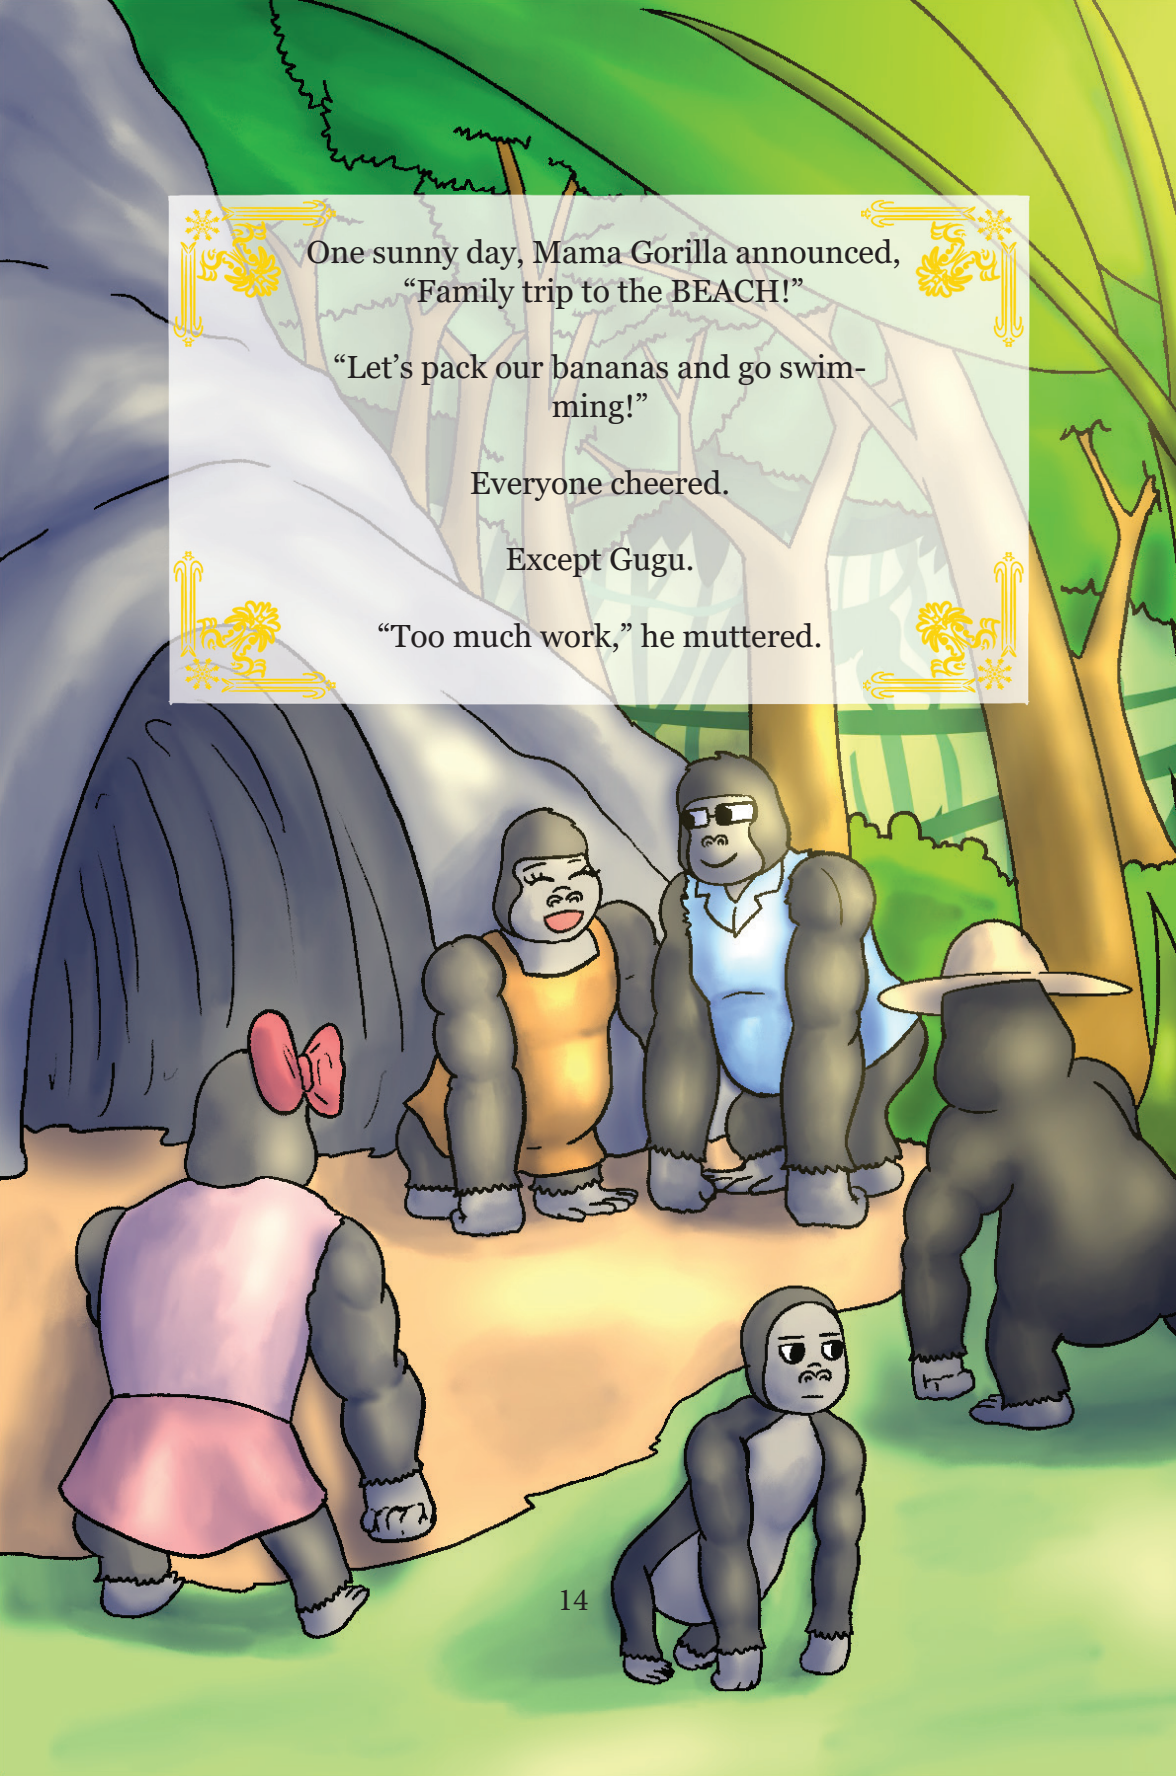

Mama Gorilla would say,
“Gugu, come help us!”

But Gugu would yawn and say,
“I’m on banana break.”

Papa Gorilla would say,
“You’ll never learn to climb like this!”

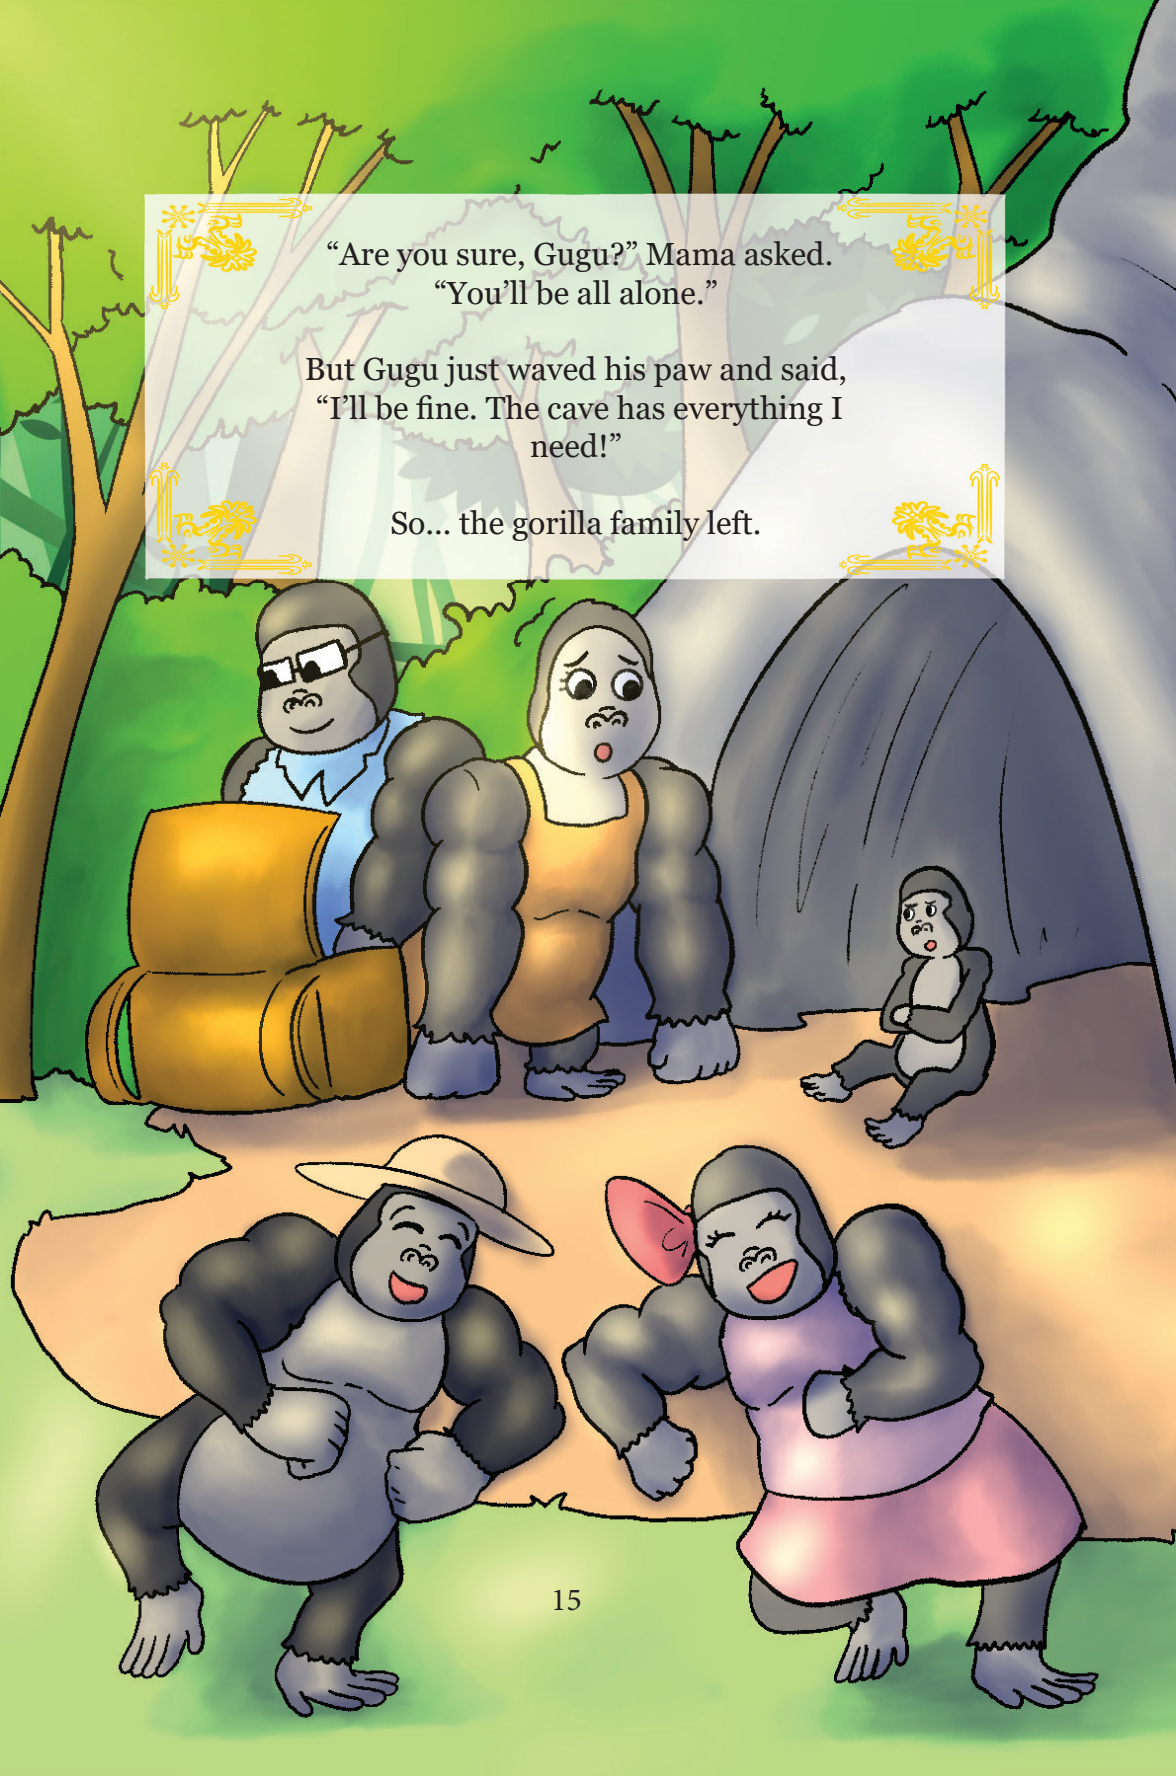

One sunny day, Mama Gorilla announced,
"Family trip to the BEACH!"

"Let's pack our bananas and go swimming!"

Everyone cheered.

Except Gugu.

"Too much work," he muttered.

“Are you sure, Gugu?” Mama asked. “You’ll be all alone.”

But Gugu just waved his paw and said, “I’ll be fine. The cave has everything I need!”

So... the gorilla family left.

Gugu nibbled a banana.
Then another.
And another.
Then... he got a little thirsty.

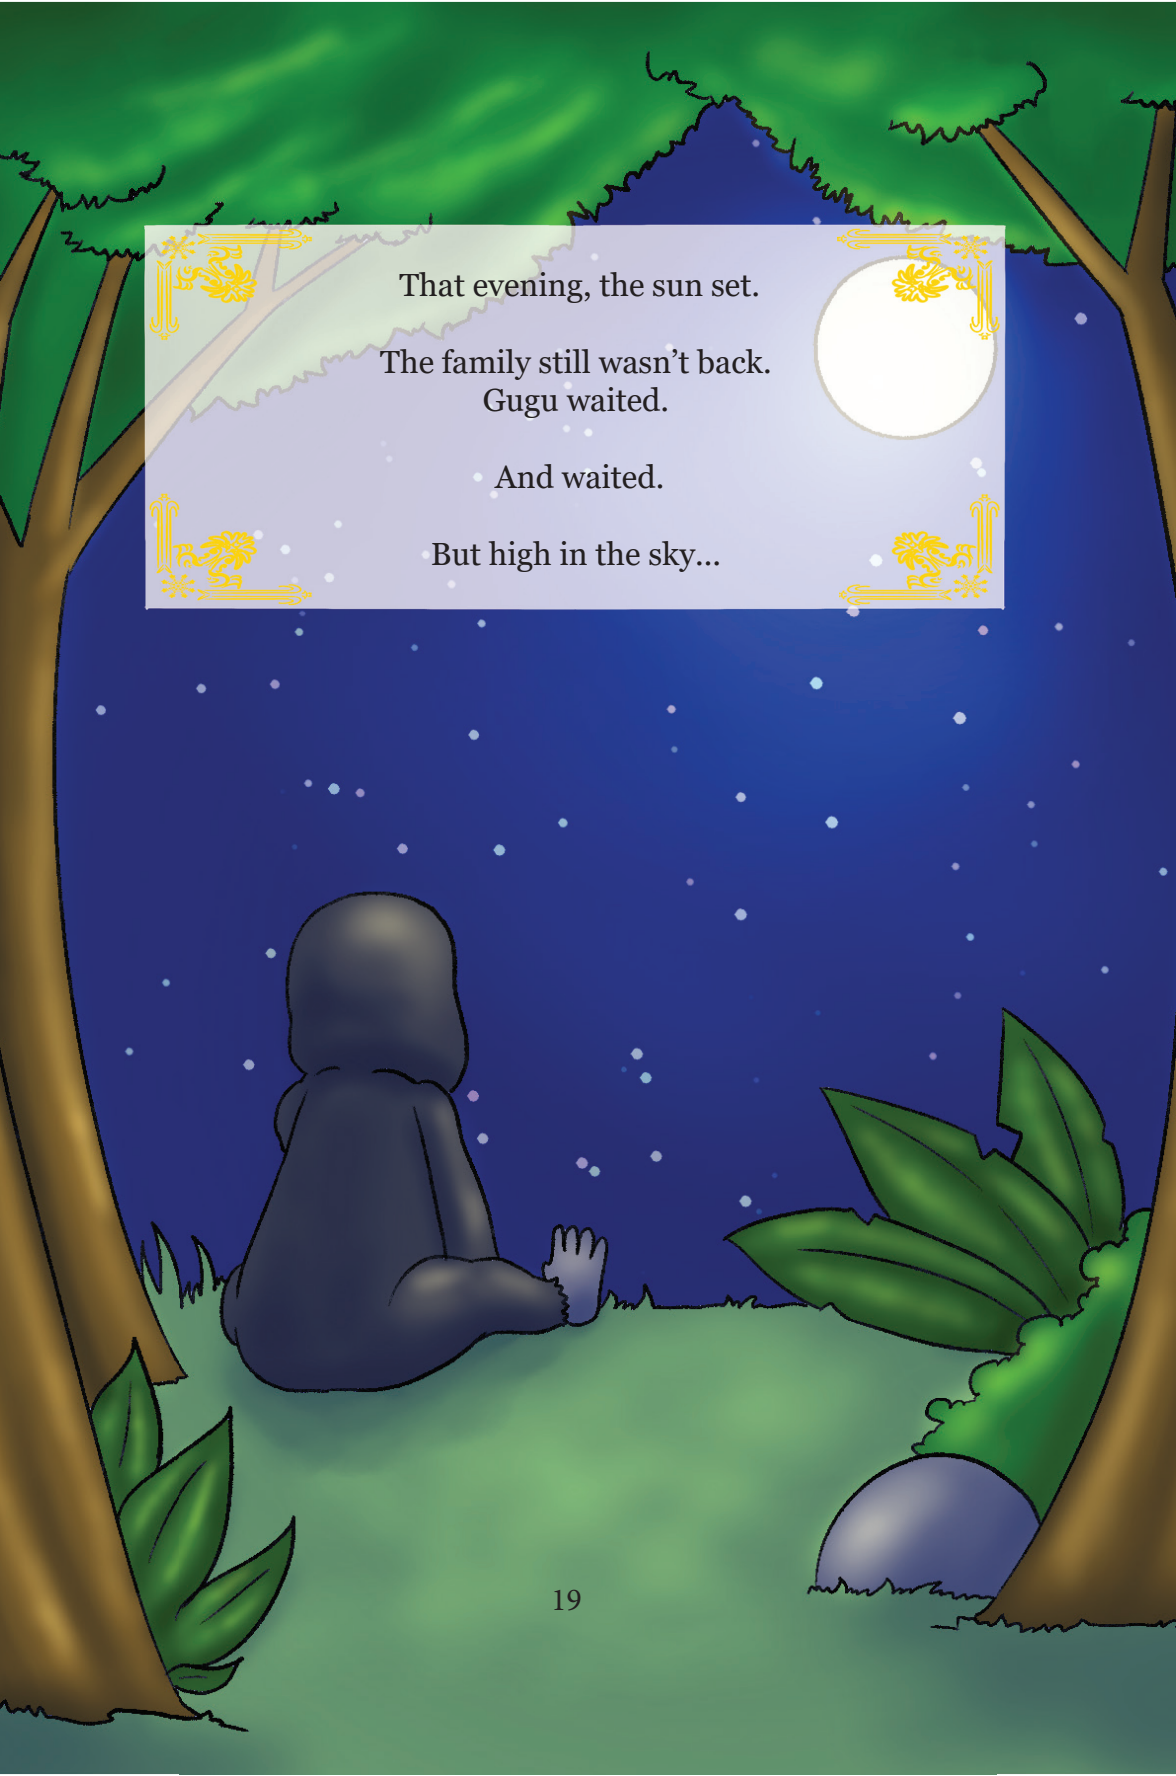

He waddled to the banana grove...
...but the Banana trees were tall.
Too tall.
Gugu had never climbed before.

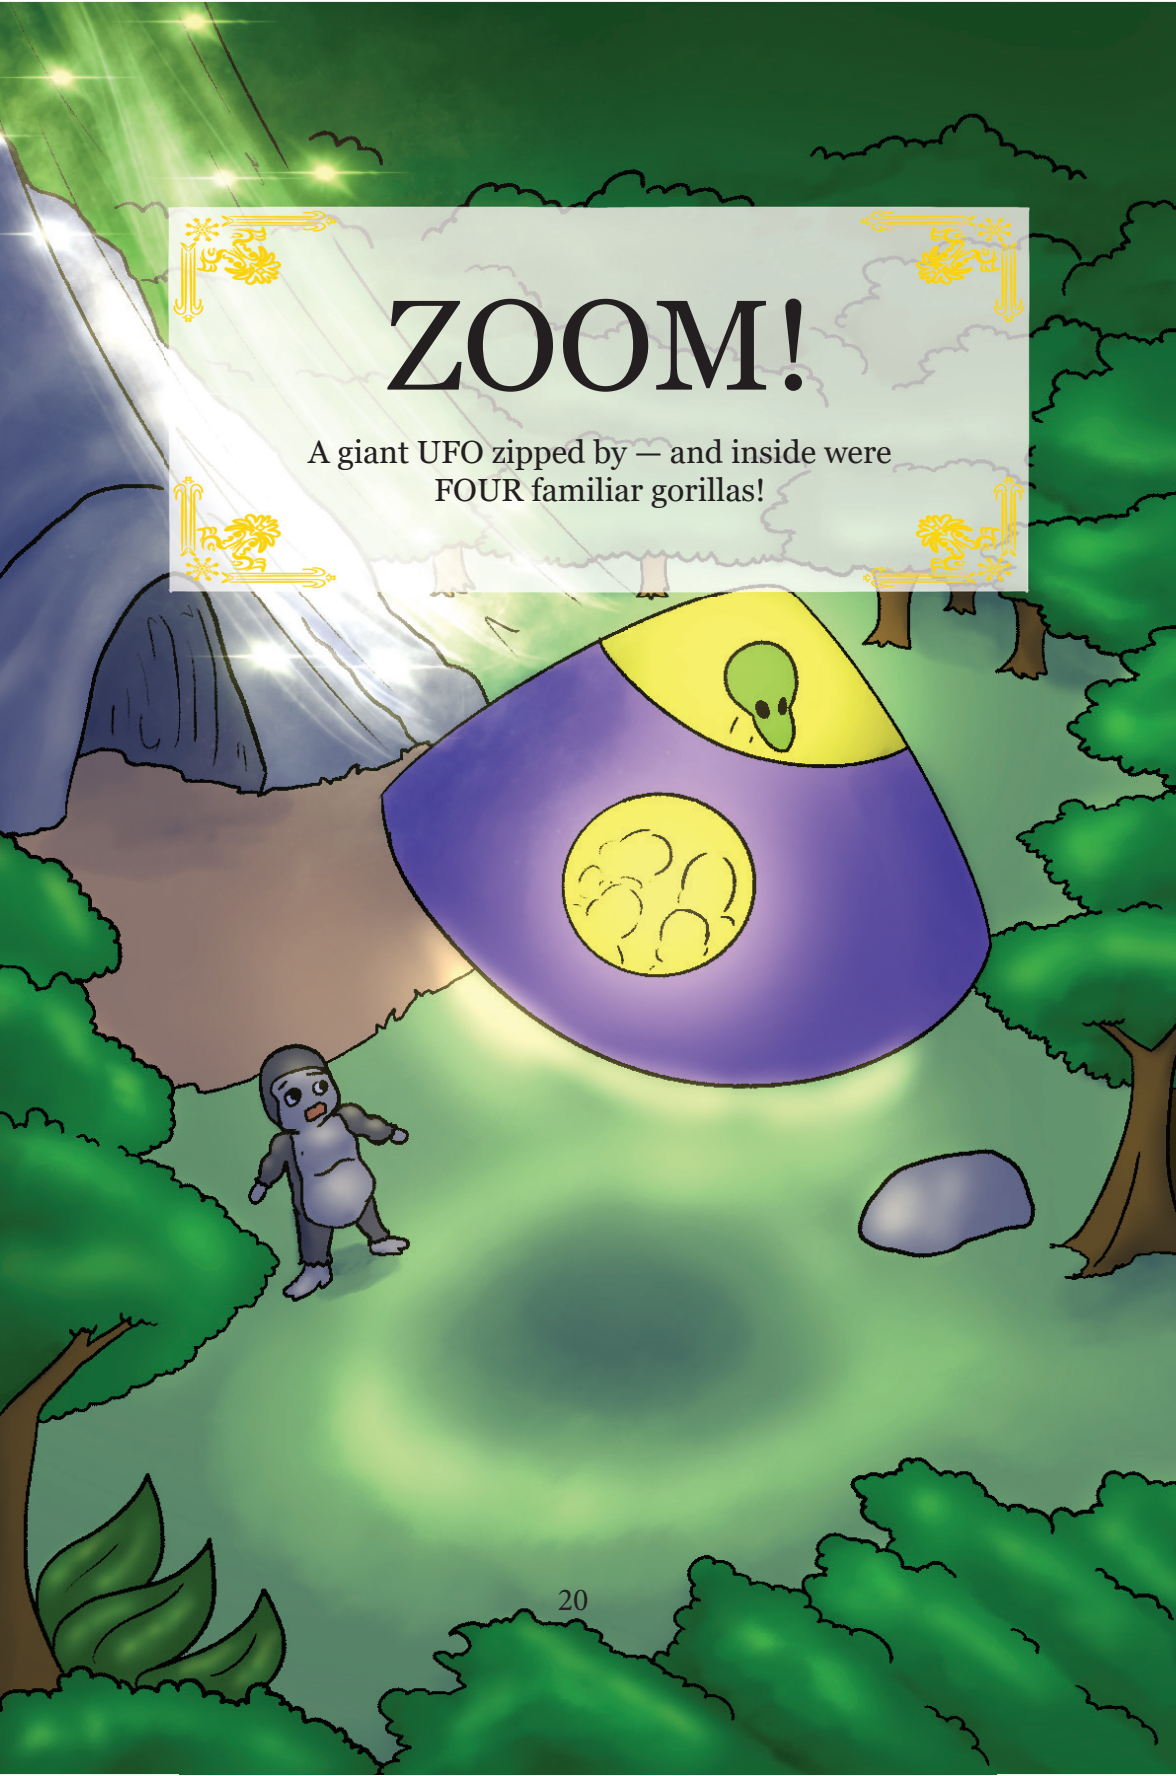

He looked for the water pool.
It was dry.

The plants were wilting.
No one had watered them.

Gugu scratched his head.
“Uh-oh... maybe I should’ve gone.”

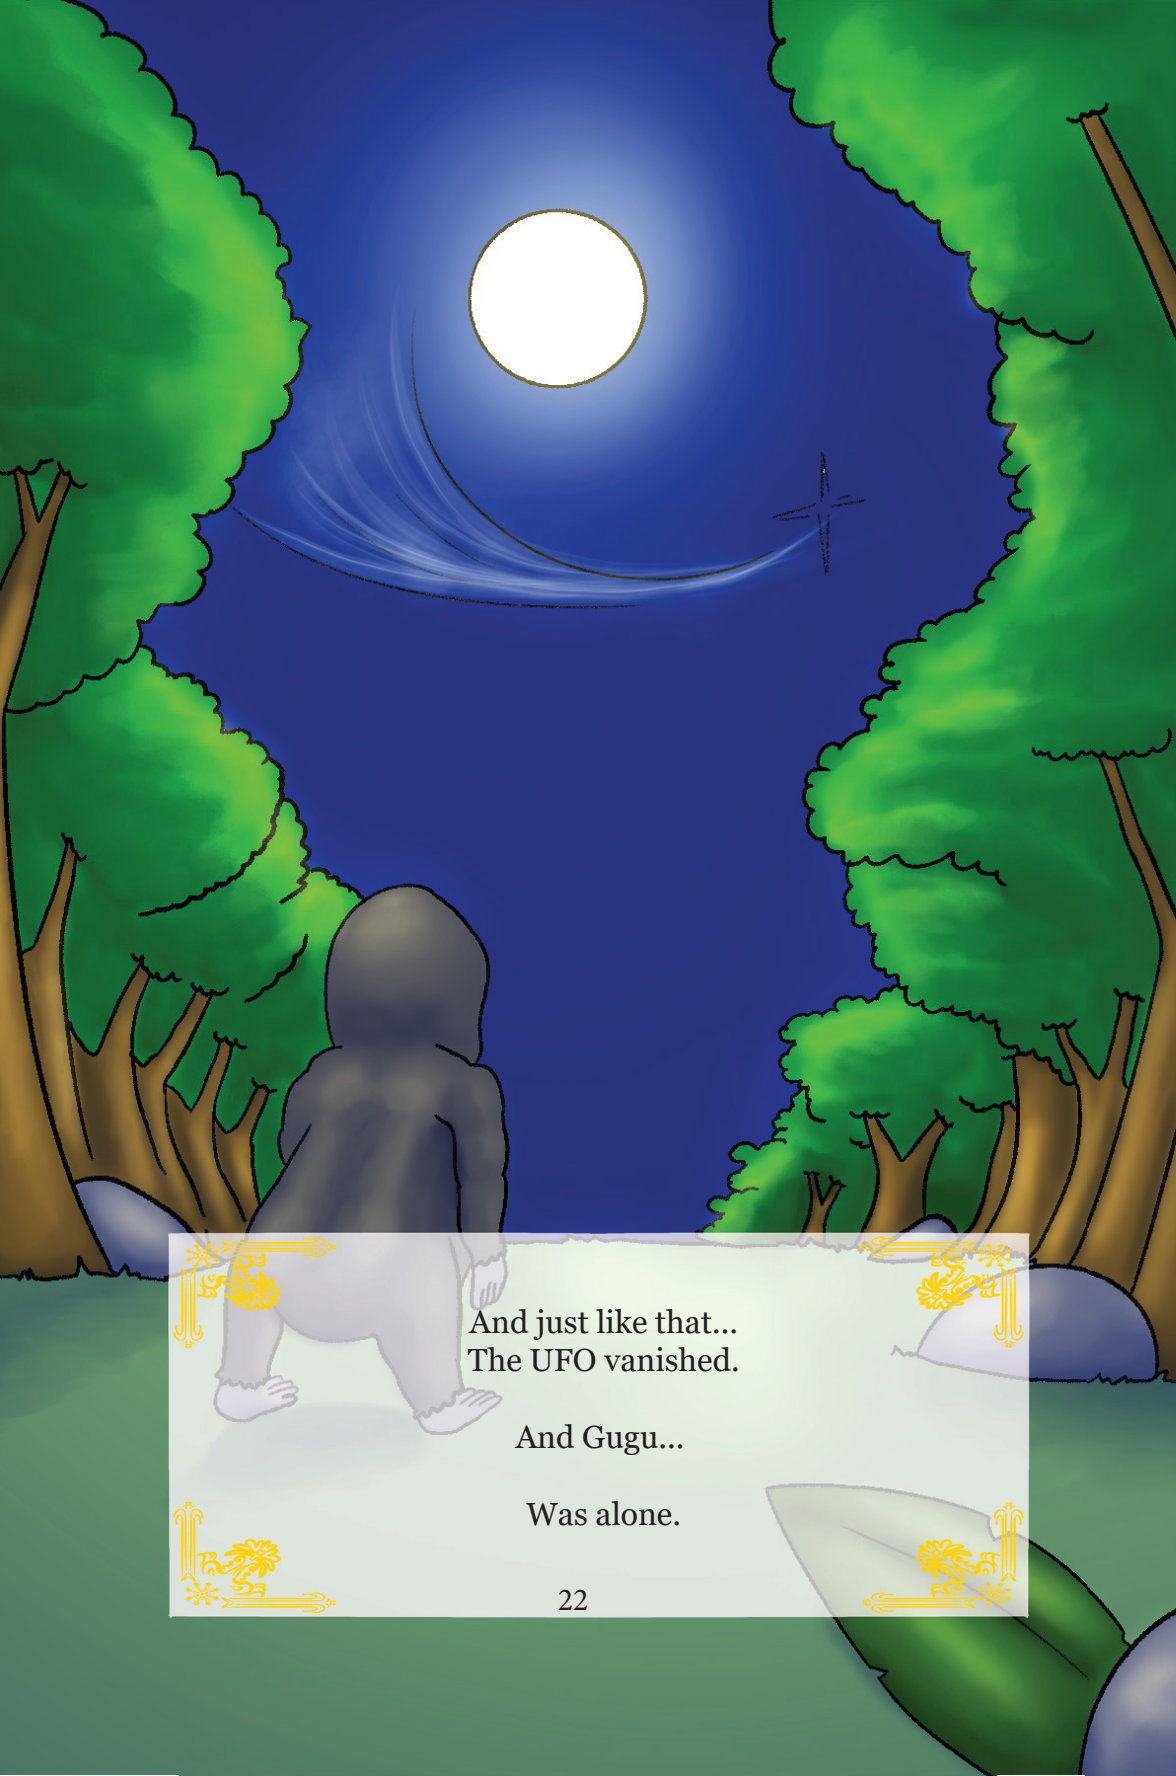

That evening, the sun set.
The family still wasn't back.
Gugu waited.
And waited.
But high in the sky...

ZOOM!
A giant UFO zipped by — and inside were FOUR familiar gorillas!

Mama Gorilla's eyes were wide with shock.
Papa Gorilla looked like he was shouting.
Bongo pounded the glass in panic.
Biba Shouting through the glass.

Gugu just froze, watcing his Family taken away

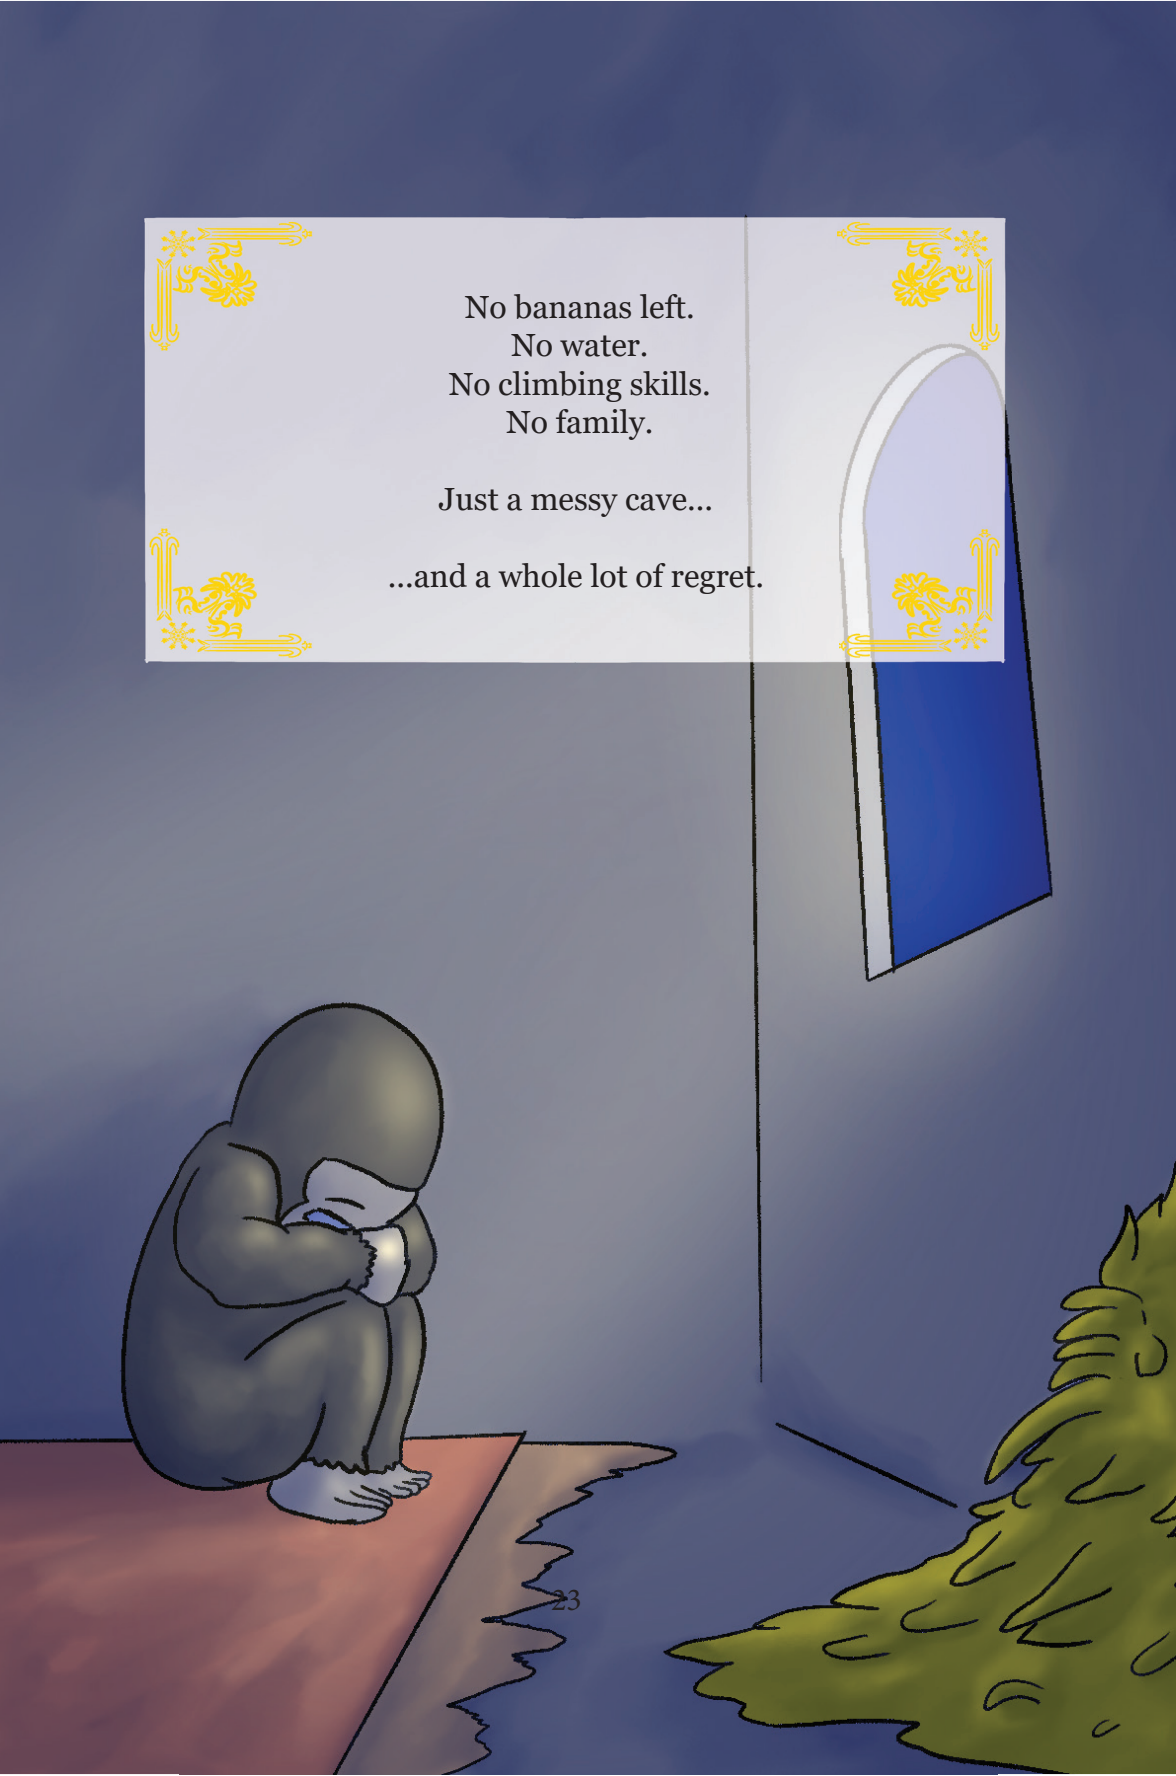

And just like that...
The UFO vanished.

And Gugu...

Was alone.

No bananas left.
No water.
No climbing skills.
No family.
Just a messy cave...
...and a whole lot of regret.

From that day on, Gogo promised:
No more lazy days.
No more ignoring Mama.
And maybe he'd learn how to climb.
But it was too late.
The gorilla family was gone...
...and Gogo would always remember the day he stayed behind.

The End?

What Do You Think Happened to Gugu's Family?

A Lesson from Gugu's Story

"This is a lesson about what happens when you don't help, don't learn, or don't spend time with your family.

Sometimes, when you keep saying no, when you stay stubborn, one day your family might be gone—just like that. And when they're not there, you might find yourself alone, not knowing how to do even the simple things without them.

It's something many of us do sometimes—being stubborn, not helping, not listening.

But just like Gugu, we can learn before it's too late.
As a fellow little gorilla who once acted the same way, I know this lesson very well.

When you grow up, the days you spent with family and the things you learned together will matter more than you think."

From One Little Gorilla to Another

When I was seven years old, I was a small, stubborn little gorilla too.

My mama told me this story as a bedtime tale, and it has stayed with me ever since.

Even though I didn't always listen (and sometimes still don't!), the lesson was one I never forgot.

This book is for her—and for anyone who's ever been a little stubborn but still has time to learn, help, and grow.

Thank you for reading Gugu's story.
Every day is a new chance to learn, to help, and to spend time with the ones we love.

Until next time, little gorillas... see you on the next adventure!
